Sunday was the last day for the Thousand Spring's Festival of Art on Ritter Island.

This was the seventeenth year for the festival that goes to support the Southern Idaho Land trust.

It's always a favorite for the locals to enjoy, music, art work, food and drink.

Not only is it fun for spectators but the artist that come from all over the state and region enjoy it as well.

This year organizers say the economy may have prevented some artist from coming to the festival.

Even though, there were a total of 70 artists at this year's festival.
